In A Classic Case of Murder, Ben and Mark, from the Clements Police Department , are investigating a pretty classic case of murder. Carrie Wellington, a famous writer, was murdered in her own car. What a tragic loss! She was such a nice woman, kind and generous! Who would think shed end up strangled with a guitar string? In When the Shivers Run Down Your Spine, Kate Plain is just that- plain. She blends into her surroundings and observes. Painfully shy and unaware of any of her potential charms, she just goes to work every day, does her time there, quietly and efficiently and then comes home. At night she puts on fuzzy pajamas, gets a warm cup of coco and then writes lurid stories that are published under an alias. Even the picture on the cover of these books are not of her- they are pictures of her sister Elyse. In When the Wind Howls in New Directions, Susan Cabot opens her eyes in the hospital. She has practically no memory of what happened to her and Colton Pidcock in that hotel room, where they must have been attacked by her best friend Kate. But Susan still can't believe it, though she struggles to remember the tragedy, she can't get out of her head one particular detail. The scent. The scent that seems surprisingly familiar. In Passage, Lynn was tired of working in the garden, outside of her late grandmother's house, and she was about to get some tea when she had a chance encounter with fate instead. His name was Tom, or Tomas, and though he had the perfect smile and tailored suit, he was the worst vacuum salesman in the world. He didn't even know that it had to be plugged in to turn it on. In Count Dorkula, I Presume?, a short story with fast pacing and a lot of heart, Count Dorkula follows a greatly misunderstood surgeon and his new assistant as they go from just a very good team to a couple. Unfortunately for them, the jealous staff of their small hospital is not thrilled with this development especially the nurse who had thought that she would be the one to end up with the tall, dark and mysterious doctor.
