

Plays for Dreamers

Plays for Dreamers encompasses the idea that life is a dream, a spiritual matrix, a hologram, projection of consciousness, and not what it appears to be. Or, that society and humanity on macro and micro/individual levels are not what we wish them to be, and at times make life a waking nightmare/daymare. Love and romance are also dreams, illusory, intangible, hard to grasp onto, or too good to be true. Art imitates life, which imitates art. Everything that exists, including art, literature, plays, movies, spirituality, philosophy, science, education, and even people themselves, all allude to each other, in some way, and are all an illusion on numerous levels. Many of the works in this book also allude to each other. Here is a list of what some of the plays allude to:

American Afterlife is a short comedic play, which takes place in a waiting room in Heaven or Bardo. It alludes to the characters Willie Loman from Death of a Salesman, Dave Moss and Shelly Levine from Glengary Glenn Ross, and Dexter Green from Winter Dreams. They are all businessmen who have passed away and are waiting to be reborn into the next life.

All-American Woman is a short, comedic play which takes place in a bar. It uses characters from the short stories The Birthmark and The Bachelors Paradise and Tarterus of Maids, and the real life first wave feminist, playwright, and essayist Judith Sargent Murray. It is a commentary on what society believes American women should be like, which has not changed that much in the last hundred or so years, since these short stories were written and Judith Sargent Murray was alive. Existential Dilemma uses characters from the movies The Truman Show, The Matrix, Existenz, Inception, and Vanilla Sky, as well as the scientist Albert Einstein, and playwright William Shakespeare. It takes these characters and compares and contrasts the concepts in the movies that life is a spiritual matrix, a virtual reality video game, a computer simulation, a shared dream, or just one persons dream, all in our heads, and perhaps revolves just around one persons consciousness.

Ascended Masters and Goddesses takes the religious, spiritual and philosophical figures Diogenes, Jesus, Buddha, Kali, Isis, Lao Tzu, and Star and puts them in a studio apartment in which they all attempt to assist a mid-20s grad student named Salma who is without a job and might get evicted, if her already late school refund check does not show up in time. The plays _Last Call_, _I AM/I WILL_, and _Coming to Being_, and the flash fiction Let the Devil Speak, and short story Comfort in the Arms of B__ all allude to each other and the screenplay _Morningstar_. They all speak of the illusions of life, the idea that one person may be dreaming life, that the concepts of I AM and I Will end up both being the same, and that the Morningstar is both Jesus and Lucifer combined, which the Bible has used the term Morningstar to describe both. _Row, Row_ monologues and the one act play _Life is But a Dream_ allude to the screenplay _Row,Row_, which uses the idea that life is a dream and spiritual matrix, and can all be in one persons head, or perhaps is a dream for two. There is a good mixture between comedic, dramatic, and romantic plays. You are sure to be able to relate to at least one play, on a personal level, if not all, on a conceptual level. These plays are both thought provoking, philosophical and spiritual, as well as lighthearted, playful, and fun. This is a quick read and worth buying just to read it, even if performing these plays is the last thing from your mind. Because these plays are one act plays, they could also be closet plays, which are meant only to be read, and not performed. However, these plays are fun to perform in a University setting. In need of a great lead female role to play? This book consists of many female protagonists, male/female co-stars, and small group plays.
