Woodpecker in the Wood Woodpecker flying over the field To the wood beyond Calling as he passes To the ducks upon the pond Laughing as he disappears Out of sight now gone Into his own habitat Safe from everyone Many oak trees waiting In which he can hide This wood is long, winding Also very wide This lovely bird has feathers Which are very green Brings delight to all Who have ever seen Not everyone is lucky To see him about If you should, then its true There will be no doubt Who it is among the birds That is in your sight Woodpecker is unique With colours very bright Living in a hollow tree In the wood he knows So the young are born here Each one slowly grows Till the time comes To leave and go out alone Every fledgling knows When they should have flown Delightful are the young birds As they learn to fly Following the parent first While they have a try Then off they go To survive life and all its ways Enjoy most, cope with some Such may be their days As the flash of green appears Laughing call is heard Woodpecker is around again What a very special bird Also available by Jessie Booth: Childrens stories available on Kindle: The Adventures of Ulona the Unicorn Poetry books now available on Kindle: Whims and Fancies in Verse Musings and Thoughts in Verse Playful Angels and Gentle Nature in Verse The Beauty of Nature in Verse Natures Year in Verse Available in Paperback: The Complete Poetry Collection of Jessie Booth (This book combines all five smaller kindle poetry volumes into one paperback book) If you would like to visit Jessies blog please go to: <http://jessiespoetrypage.blogspot.com>
